History of Coronado

Flat and treeless, Coronado was home to mostly jackrabbits and quail when Elisha Babcock and Hampton Story decided to build a seaside resort community. For $110,000 in 1886, the Midwestern investors purchased the land, laid out lots, planted trees, and built a water system and power plant. Their subsequent land auction fetched prices of $500 to $1600 per lot, recouping the men's investment and gaining them the capital for building a resort that would be the "talk of the Western world."

On January 12, 1887, the fast-track construction project began, with laborers working around the clock. The first official guests checked in a year later. Built entirely of wood and completed at a cost of $1 million, the Hotel del Coronado, designed in the Queen Anne Revival style with its whimsical turrets and asymmetrical design, is one of the few Victorian seaside resorts still standing.

The hard times of the 1890s depression brought sugar magnate John D. Spreckels into the picture. He fell in love with "The Del" and became the sole proprietor by 1892. He built a grand mansion across the street on Glorietta Boulevard and established Tent City south along the strand. Tent City, with bathing facilities, carnival booths, a Ferris Wheel and dance pavilion, appealed to the emerging middle class who couldn't afford the hotel. Unlike the hotel's 'season' of attracting visitors from cold climates in the winter, Tent City drew a summer crowd from hot inland California and Arizona – a pattern that continues today. Tent City flourished until 1939.

Spreckels sold 'North Island' to the US government in 1917, and the US Army, Marines, and the Navy made it home. North Island was the site for the first seaplane flight, the first mid-air refueling and the first non-stop transcontinental flight. Charles Lindbergh flew from North Island on the first leg of his celebrated New York to Paris flight in 1927.

The relaxed way of Coronado life changed forever in 1969 when protests from many residents over the bridge to San Diego opened and replaced the automobile ferries. The influx of thousands of daily vehicles prompted Coronado's first traffic signals. But the heritage of planned development, begun by Babcock and Story, has been upheld, preserving the vibrant quality of the residential streets and the business community.

History of Naval Air Station North Island

North Island was commissioned as a naval air station in 1917. The station, which was originally called the Naval Air Station, San Diego until 1955; was granted official recognition as the "Birthplace of Naval Aviation" by a resolution of the House Armed Services Committee on August 15, 1963.

The Navy's first aviator, Lieutenant Ellyson, and many of his colleagues were trained at North Island starting in 1911. At that time, North Island was an uninhabited sand flat. It had been used in the late 19th century for horseback riding and hunting by guests of J. D. Spreckles' resort hotel, the now famous Hotel Del Coronado.

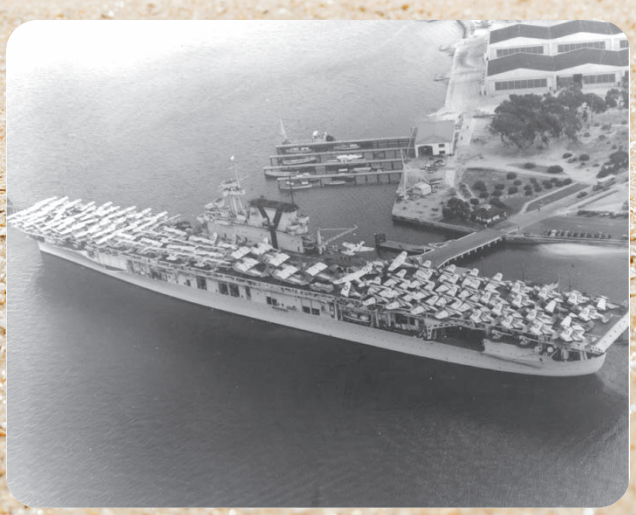

North Island derived its name from the original geography. Up until the early 20th century, it was referred to as North Coronado Island, due to the fact that the Spanish Bight separated it from South Coronado Island until the early 1940s.

In 1886, North and South Coronado Islands were purchased by a developer to become a residential resort. South Coronado became the City of Coronado, but North Coronado was never developed. Instead, Glen Curtiss opened a flying school and held a lease to the property until the beginning of World War I.

In 1914, then unknown aircraft builder, Glenn Martin, took off and demonstrated his pusher aircraft over the island with a flight that included the first parachute jump in the San Diego area. The jump was made by a ninety-pound civilian woman named Tiny Broadwick. Other aviation milestones originating at North Island included the first seaplane flight in 1911, the first mid-air refueling and the first non-stop transcontinental flight, both in 1923.

Before the Air Station was commissioned, Glenn Curtiss also trained the first group of Japanese aviators at his flying school on the Island. Among them was a Lieutenant C. Yamada would later become infamous as the head of Japan's Naval aviation forces in World War II.

In 1917, Congress appropriated the land and two airfields were commissioned on its sandy flats. The Navy started with a tent-covered compound known as "Camp Trouble". The Navy shared the island with the Army Signal Corps' Rockwell Field until 1937, when the Army left and the Navy expanded its operations to cover the whole island.

One of history's most famous aviation feats was the flight of Charles A. Lindbergh from New York to Paris in May 1927. His aircraft, The Spirit of St. Louis, was built in San Diego, and his flight originated at North Island on May 9, 1927, when he began the first leg of his transatlantic journey.

Because the North and South Coronado Islands were separated by the Spanish Bight, the main entrance to the Air Station was via a causeway built along what is now McCain Blvd. When approaching Flag Circle from the front gate, the last tiled roof building on the left was the original gate guard building as evidenced by the Army Air Corps insignia, a pair of flight wings bisected by a single blade propeller, carved in the window shutters.

Forefathers of today's "Blue Angels", the three plane "Sea Hawks" of VF-6B, the "Felix the Cat" squadron, were thrilling audiences with flight demonstrations as early as 1928. They demonstrated the training skills of Navy fighter and bomber pilots and on many occasions, and even flew their aircraft in formation with the wings tethered together.
